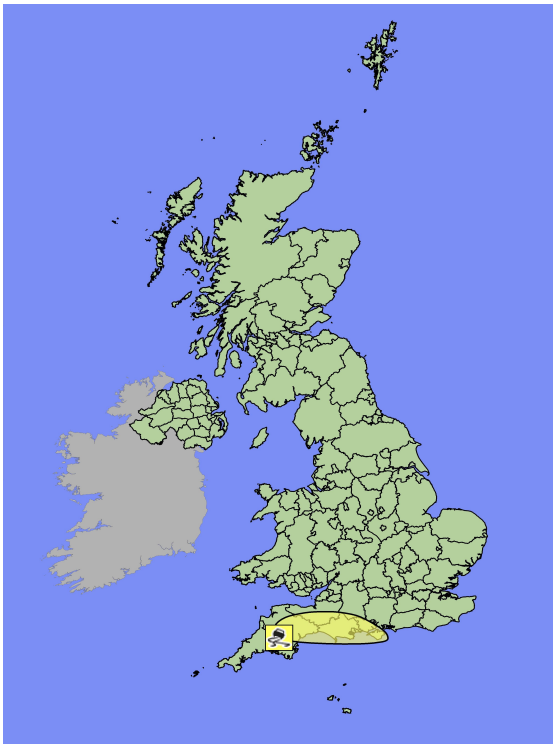
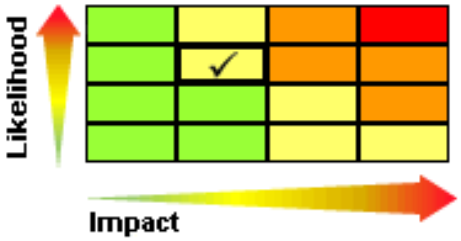
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Showers are moving inland from the English Channel. During the evening these have been falling as rain, but as they move inland some may turn to snow. Either way, with roads and pavements so cold, some icy surfaces are likely to result.

A slight snowfall is also possible in a few locations.

By morning the showers should have cleared.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 23:00 on Tue, 11th Dec 2012 until 11:00 on Wed, 12th Dec 2012

Some showers of rain, sleet or snow are expected to occur during the night.

The public should be aware that roads and pavements may become icy as a result, particularly those that are untreated.
